ReWILD THE WILLAMETTE

OREGON CITY, OR | Down the hill from our Oregon City office, the powerful waters of the Willamette River crash over the Pacific Northwest's largest falls. For millennia, Willamette Falls has been a gathering place to fish, to trade, and to appreciate the remarkable natural abundance of our region's lands and waters. Today, the Willamette has become another kind of gathering place - a place where advocates for fish and rivers have come together to ReWild the Willamette and revive its once fabled runs of wild fish.

After a disastrously low return of just 812 wild steelhead in 2017, our staff and River Stewards launched our ReWild the Willamette Campaign in 2018 to revive 20,000 wild winter steelhead and 30,000 wild spring chinook in the Upper Willamette River. To generate maximum impact we converged our efforts with those of partners from across the region whenever and wherever our goals align for wild fish.

To start, Native Fish Society, Northwest Environmental Defence Center, and Wild Earth Guardians, represented by Advocates for the West, challenged the Army Corps of Engineers and National Marine Fisheries Service and won a first key victory - the agencies admitted to falling short of their court-mandated actions to improve fish passage, water quality, and quantity at their 13 dam sites. While these agencies are considering new information and updating their plans, we're pursuing operational changes at the dams, which will improve the health of the Willamette River and its fish.

To build a groundswell of public support, Native Fish Society joined with McKenzie Fly Fishers, Assoc. of NW Steelheaders, Trout Unlimited, NW Guide and Anglers Assoc. and American Rivers to form the Willamette Salmon and Steelhead Recovery Coalition. Together, this coalition empowers our supporters and community members to advocate to the agencies and our congressional delegation for volitional fish passage, instream flows, and improved water quality at the Army Corps dams in the upper Willamette. To launch the coalition's effort, we hosted over 250 supporters, members, congressional staffers, and friends at our kickoff event in Oregon City.

Wild salmon, steelhead, and trout need grassroots activism now more than ever! Visit nativefishsociety.org/membership to join Native Fish Society as a member and support the revival of abundant wild fish across the Pacific Northwest!

RIVER STEWARD OF THE YEAR | CHARLES GEHR

In 2018, Charles received our River Steward of the Year award for his tireless work to protect Oregon's salmon habitats from harmful suction dredge mining. His consistent voice for the Rogue River's native fish helped secure permanent protections for 22,000 river miles of salmon habitat!

LIFETIME ACHIEVEMENT AWARD | JOYCE SHERMAN & IAN FERGUSON

Joyce and Ian received our highest honor for their 24 years of dedication to monitoring, protecting, and restoring wild steelhead in the Salmonberry River. Their River Steward efforts have inspired generations of new Stewards to follow their example as effective advocates for their homewaters.

ADVANCING WILD STEELHEAD CATCH & RELEASE

SOUTHWEST OREGON | There are twelve streams in the lower 48 states and British Columbia where recreational anglers can legally kill wild, native steelhead. All twelve streams are in Oregon and ten of these are found in the state's southwest corner. Equally concerning, no state fishery management plan guides steelhead fishing regulations in southwest Oregon, and a lack of funding prevents state fish biologists from gathering even basic data about wild steelhead including how many adult steelhead return to specific rivers and how many are fish are killed annually by anglers.

Out of respect for the region's wild steelhead, five local angling guides joined forces with a team of NFS staff and River Stewards to draft a public petition for wild steelhead catch and release. Working throughout the winter and spring, supporters collected 655 signatures, with 71% coming from residents of southwest Oregon. An online petition generated an additional 3,500 supportive signatures from across Oregon and the region. All interests, from tackle shops, to guides, to local gear, bait and fly anglers are represented among the signatories.

With over 4,000 signatures in hand, the petition was submitted to the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife and scheduled for the Commission's September meeting. After long deliberation, the Fish and Wildlife Commission did not grant the full petition but did take action to reduce the annual bag limit of wild steelhead by 40% and directed agency staff to begin work on a steelhead plan for southwest Oregon. Our River Stewards, staff, and growing coalition looks forward to advancing catch and release regulations for wild steelhead through the stakeholder process beginning in the fall of 2019.

ADVOCATING FOR A WILD & FREE KLAMATH RIVER

Time to iron out Iron Gate Dam & Hatchery

More of this, free-flowing Klamath!

KLAMATH RIVER, CA & OR | The construction of salmon hatcheries alongside hydropower dams has been a common practice in the Pacific Northwest for more than a century. Dams built without fish passage blocked native fish like salmon, steelhead, and lamprey from utilizing critical habitats. To replace the lost habitat, hatcheries were built at the base of dams. Thanks in large part to this approach, 40% of the salmon runs in the Pacific Northwest are extinct, and the remaining wild stocks are listed as threatened or endangered species.

To reverse course, the removal of harmful and obsolete dams has become a well-established way to restore fish health and river function. However, what's been lost in this effort to date is decommissioning the hatcheries built alongside these dams. In 2016, when a new agreement was signed to remove the four lower dams on the Klamath it included the continued operation of Iron Gate Hatchery. To support dam removal and ensure the success of the largest river restoration to date, Native Fish Society staff and River Stewards led and submitted technical comments along with partners at Patagonia and Wild Fish Conservancy during key periods of agency review. As a result, there is now a "No Hatchery" dam removal alternative listed in the official record and among the options available to decision-makers. A free-flowing and wild fish centric Klamath River would represent one of the single greatest opportunities to revive abundant, wild fish and thriving indigenous and local communities along the Klamath River.
